

Partnering with CEOs and Senior Leadership Teams to Transform People, Productivity, and Profit

Karen Snyder is a recognized speaker, thought leader, author, and facilitator on corporate culture, building teams that thrive, and attracting and retaining the right talent at every level. She partners with C-Suite leaders and frontline managers to develop synergy within organizations. Karen helps leaders become change agents and develop their employees to be better problem solvers, communicators, and role models for one another.

Karen has worked with the U.S. Department of the Interior, NASA, the EPA, and many other government agencies. In addition, she has worked regularly with public organizations such as Lockheed Martin and Verizon, as well as the pharmaceutical industry including Middlebrook Pharmaceuticals. Many non-profit organizations and associations count on her as well. Karen's enthusiasm, energy, and humor are contagious, and she brings her passion for people to every program.

Karen holds a master's degree in organizational development from Johns Hopkins University and an undergraduate degree in industrial psychology from the University of Virginia. She is among fewer than ten percent of professional speakers worldwide awarded the Certified Speaking Professional (CSP) designation. Karen is also one of a select few to be awarded the CSP along with the Certified Professional Facilitator (CPF) professional designation. She is also an Associate Certified Coach (ACC) through the International Coach Federation.

Karen is the author of two books: Eating Worms – Practicing Leadership Every Day and Relationship Centered Consulting – The Magical Way to Grow Your Business. Karen is a genuinely gifted communicator. She is full of inspirational insights and wisdom, and her delivery is always served with a splash of spunk.
